The Challenge

Help your providers adapt to value-based reimbursement by providing patient education

Historically, patients with chronic conditions could have meant more revenue for providers and there wasn't a financial consequence to members not proactively seeking care performed at clinical standards. With the advent of value-based reimbursement, the narrative is changing. Providers now bear risk for patient outcomes, and they need to ensure that patients know their role in managing their own health. Patient education has become a key aspect of care; therefore, there is significant financial risk for payers and their providers who ignore the role of patient self-care and fail to successfully adapt to the value-based reimbursement model.

The Solution

Educate members where they are, in their language, on their device

Once a patient is diagnosed, a care manager or clinician can assign easily digestible micro learning modules to educate the patient on how to adhere to the clinician's instructions. Each module is less than 10 minutes in length and can be accessed via mobile app or website log-in. This simple tool can maximize patient compliance in their follow up care, mitigate financial risk associated with non-compliance, and improve outcomes for a few dollars per patient. This small investment in ensuring patient education can greatly improve outcomes and reduce your cost exposure.
